

Discover our collaborative workshops by our after sales service

Nearly 40 million tons of electrical and electronic wastes are produced every year in France. At the time of the ecological transition, 40% of household appliances are still thrown away when they are still operational.

With the desire to be in line with environmental stakes, HKoenig organizes 100% free of charge collaborative repairs workshops.

To ensure you an optimal experience, HKoenig will provide you freely spare parts & all materials needed.

After having booked one session, bring your defective products to repair it by yourself. You'll be supported by the expertise and knowledge of HKoenig's professionals all along the session. Note that repairs might be not possible for some products. Once you have subscribed for a workshop session, you'll be informed about the feasibility of your case.

These workshops encourage to give your appliances a second lease of life, and to limit electrical wastes. You can bring your products, no matter how old they are, even after thirty years!

This instructive experience is also the opportunity to enhance your technical skills, and to get to know your household appliances. What better to learn how to repair your defective appliances and to give a bit for our planet with these playful workshops?

Let's come and join us in this collective, valuable, and eco-friendly experience!

HKoenig Company profile

In 1960, a modest German hardware dealer named Helmut Koenig took advantage of the post-war industrial boom to set up his own household appliance workshop.

Within a short period of time, products such as hoovers and food processors became popular and Mr. Koenig became well known.

He then decided to work in collaboration with local factories in order to have a more dense production. His company quickly grew to a national level and later, his products will be sold all over the world.

The brand is now owned by the French company ADEVA. The HKoenig products are known worldwide for their reliability. The brand is specialised in household appliances. It was one of the first brand to sell bagless hoovers that also sucked up dust mites.

What that unites all the brand's products is their high standards. The main criteria that HKoenig wants to defend are quality, innovation and design. Its products are quite diverse, as you can find in the catalogue everything from misters to as well as kettles and even wine cellars.
